He then moved to the greater Los Angeles area where he met Annette and served as the West coast representative for an Art supply company. Later selling auto insurance, and then owning a auto insurance brokerage firm. After the Northridge earthquake, Jim decided it was time to leave LA for Las Vegas. After a year in Vegas.. Jim, along with prompting and help from Victoria, his step daughter, made the decision to move up to the Sacramento area with Annette, where he would spend the last 25 years of his life. Jim had a gruff Texan attitude with a heart of gold and a twinkle in his eye that made him a very special person to the people around him.
